Edward G. (Buddy) LeRoux, Jr.
Jean R. Yawkey
Haywood C. Sullivan

Mrs. Jean Yawkey is in her seventh year as Red Sox President, marking the 50th season of Yawkey tradition at Fenway Park. She succeeded her husband, Tom, after his death on July 9, 1976. A Red Sox enthusiast, Mrs. Yawkey views most home games from the familiar rooftop box once shared by her husband. As Jean Hollander, she grew up in Freeport, L.I., and was a New York fashion model for ten years before marrying Tom Yawkey in 1944.

Haywood Sullivan, Red Sox Executive Vice-President and General Manager, is a baseball success story — a one-time reserve catcher who rose from dugout to team ownership. He was a star quarterback and catcher at the U. of Florida and signed a bonus contract with the Red Sox June 15, 1952. His big league career was shortened by disc surgery, but Haywood became a minor league manager and then manager of the Kansas City A's. In 1966 he rejoined the Red Sox as vice-president in charge of player personnel. Sullivan is currently a member of the major leagues' Executive Council and was named the American League's top executive for 1981 in a poll by U.P.I.

Buddy LeRoux is another remarkable baseball success story. Currently the Executive Vice-President of Administration in charge of finances, he had served as Red Sox trainer from 1966-74. Prior to that, he was trainer of the Boston Celtics from 1958-66, and spent five years in the Boston Bruins organization. He has long been active in the health and real estate fields, and is the founder and president of New England Rehabilitation Hospital in Woburn, Mass. LeRoux is a member of the American League Schedule Committee and a trustee of the Jimmy Fund.

MANAGER RALPH HOUK

According to Ralph Houk, it takes 25 men to win a pennant. "Many people think you need big stars to win," he states. "You do need quality players, but it's the guys on the bench who make the difference in winning those extra games you need to be a pennant winner."

Through an expert blending of newcomers and veterans, Houk, the Red Sox 35th manager, built an exciting 1981 team that wasn't eliminated from the pennant chase until the season's final weekend. This achievement earned him runner-up honors as the American League's Manager of the Year and a two-year extension on his Red Sox contract through 1984.

"My ambition is to win one more pennant," Houk says. "I think we can do it. We proved last year what our young players can do, and we should be a better team in 1982."

Houk is known for his optimism. During spring training of 1981, he never tired of repeating to players, fans, and the media, that despite the loss of former stars Fred Lynn, Rick Burleson, Carlton Fisk and Butch Hobson, the team had the talent to win. Said second baseman Jerry Remy, "We believed him more and more as time went by, and we realized that there are a lot of talented guys on the club who really want to win."

The result—the Red Sox were a come-from-behind team last year that improved dramatically as the year progressed. "You have to manage according to your personnel," says Houk. "You learn something new every year. And this year I'll know the abilities of our players better, both the strong and weak points."

On October 27, 1980, Houk took over the Red Sox managerial reins, ending a two-year retirement. During his previous 16 years in the American League, he had managed the Yankees and the Tigers. Houk succeeded Casey Stengel as Yankee manager in 1961 and won three straight pennants and two World Championships. In 1961 the Yankees finished 109-53, and Houk was named Major League Manager of the Year. He spent two years as Yankee vice-president and general manager before moving back as field manager May 7, 1966, replacing Johnny Keane. In 1970 he guided a young Yankee team to a 93-69 second-place finish and was named American League Manager of the Year. Ralph left New York after the 1973 season for Detroit, where he managed for the next five years. It took some time, but he turned the Tigers' program around with a steady influx of young talent, produced an 86-76 record in 1978, and then retired.

"My wife Bette and I did all the things we'd never been able to do. I worked around the house and the yard down in Pompano Beach. Took up golf and found that I could never qualify for the pro tour. Went fishing. Then I began to watch the pennant races on TV, and they were so exciting that I started to think: 'Hey, I'm missing out on something!'"

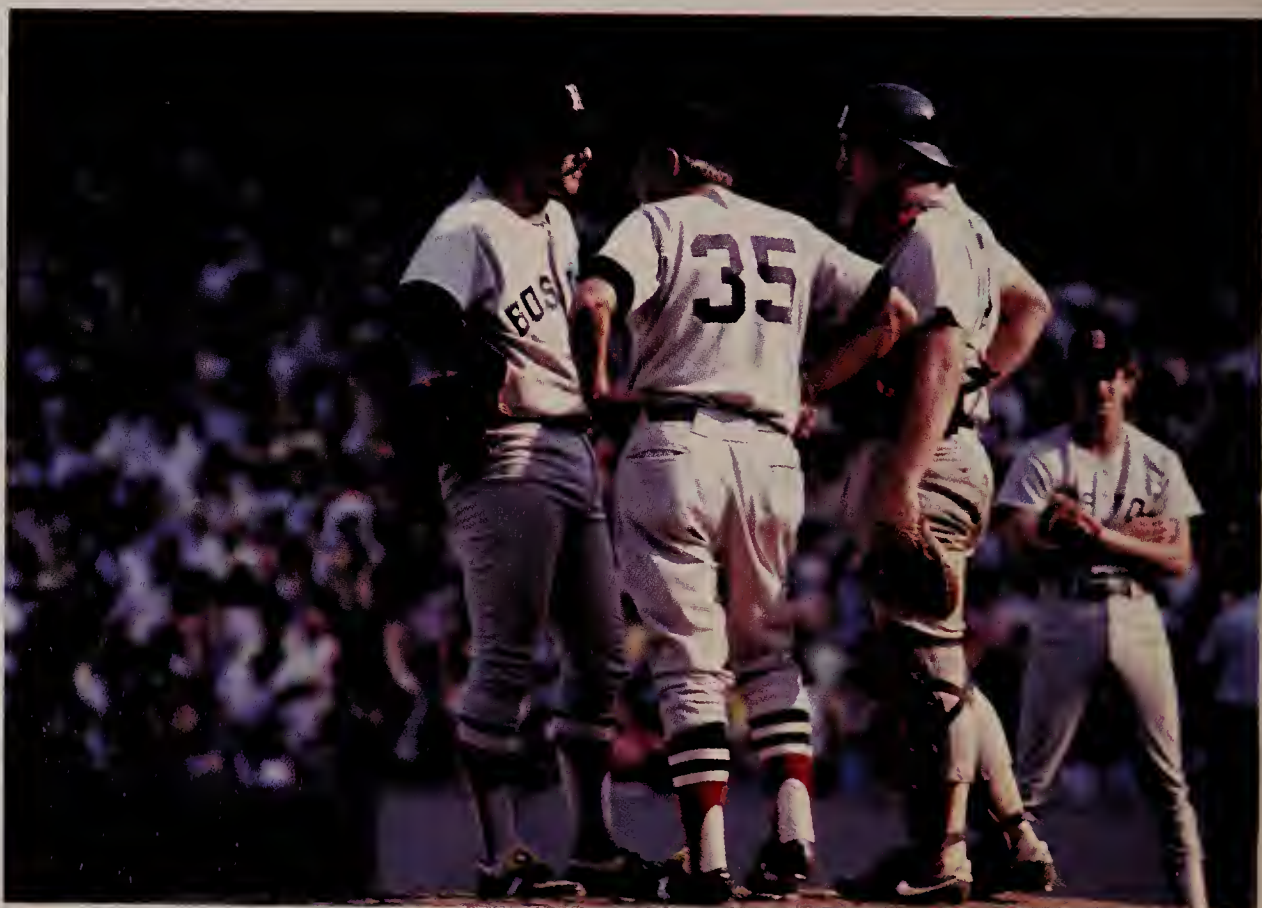

When Ralph was named Red Sox manager, Carl Yastrzemski stated, "It's a super move. I've always admired Ralph Houk. And in my twenty years in the major leagues, he was always the one manager I wanted most to play for. The man knows how to win."

Hall of Famer Al Kaline states, "Ralph was the best manager I played for. I'm sorry that I couldn't have done more to help the team when he managed in Detroit."

Ex-Yankee star Tony Kubek agreed. "I never knew a player who didn't respect him," said Kubek. "He's a very honest person, an excellent baseball man, knows how to handle pitchers and is good at fundamentals. I hate to use the old cliché, but he's a man's man. He knows when to roll with the punches and knows when to be tough."

And the "Major" (a nickname resulting from his World War II experiences) is certainly no stranger to tough assignments. "Don't forget, I took over the Yankees in 1961 after Casey left. All he did was win — ten pennants in thirteen years. Nothing could be a harder act to follow. Then I took over the Tigers in 1974 and had to replace their stars and heroes with younger people. That was tough."

Respect is important to Houk. "I don't play any favorites, and I think that's one reason I have a good reputation. I respect the players and I think they respect me. But if anyone fouls up, I'll talk to them. Anyone. Everyone is equal in my eyes."

COACHING STAFF

The Red Sox are fortunate to have an excellent coaching staff to assist Ralph Houk. The veteran staff includes Johnny Pesky, Eddie Yost, Tommy Harper, Walter Hriniaik and Lee Stange. Their dedicated work, from the first day of spring training until the last out of the season, is an important ingredient for a successful team.

□ In 1973 Tommy Harper stole 54 bases for the Red Sox to lead the American League and also break Tris Speaker's club record, set in 1912, of 52. Now, from his coaching spot at first base, Harper moves Red Sox players around the bases. Currently in his third year on the coaching staff, he also serves as the club's base-running instructor.

□ During his six years with the Red Sox, soft-spoken Walter Hriniaik has built a solid reputation as one of the game's hardest workers. Whether it's handling his bullpen coaching chores, working on hitting techniques, or pitching batting practice, Walter's efficient methods are always apparent.

□ For almost 40 years Johnny Pesky has been one of the most popular members of the Red Sox. He's been with the team as a star infielder, coach, manager (1963-64), radio-TV announcer and advertising salesman. After five years as first base coach he moved to a dugout role, assisting the manager in 1980. Pesky continues to be the team's hitting instructor.

□ Last year, Lee Stange returned as pitching coach after a six-year absence. He had been the club's pitching coach (1972-74), and then held the same position with the Twins and the A's. During his 10-year major league career, Stange spent almost four years with the Red Sox and played a key role in the "Impossible Dream" pennant of 1967.

□ It takes a special knack to be a skillful third base coach. Eddie Yost, called "The Walking Man" during a 17-year big league career, knew how to get on base. Eddie has adeptly directed Red Sox runners around third base since 1977 and is recognized as one of baseball's best coaches at the "Hot Corner."

BROADCASTERS•

Once again the flagship stations for Red Sox games are WITS radio and WSBK (TV 38) television.

Ken Coleman and Jon Miller are together on WITS for the third year, while veteran Ned Martin has a new partner on TV 38 — former Red Sox catcher Bob Montgomery.

Coleman, also executive director of the Jimmy Fund, has over 30 years of broadcast experience beginning with college football and continuing an active career with the Cleveland Indians, Cleveland Browns, Cincinnati Reds, and the Red Sox.

Miller got his pro start with the Oakland Seals of the N.H.L. In 1974 he broadcast the Oakland A's games and then did several years of TV work in the North American Soccer League. Before coming to Boston, he broadcast Texas Rangers games.

Martin is in his 22nd year of radio and TV with the Red Sox and the fourth with TV 38. After serving in the Marine Corps and graduating from Duke University, Ned went into minor league announcing. In 1976-78 he handled the American League Championship Series games for CBS radio.

Montgomery takes over the position previously held by Ken Harrelson at TV 38. Bob spent his 18-year pro career in the Red Sox organization and was in the majors from 1971 until he retired in the spring of 1980. In 1973 Bob won the Red Sox "Unsung Hero Award." Most recently, he has done sports talk and color commentary on WITS radio.

1982 BOSTON RED SOX

The 1981 Red Sox developed a contagious spirit that found its origins in the ever-optimistic attitude of Manager Ralph Houk. They were a come-from-behind team in 1981, and they battled all the way to the final weekend before being eliminated. During the past winter Houk stated, "The Red Sox have a bright future with a lot of young talent." The growing feeling around Fenway Park is that it will be a fun place to be in 1982, with plenty of thrills and excitement.

Of course, exciting baseball is a tradition at Fenway Park, a unique ballpark where no lead seems quite safe enough, and where the crowd is so close to the field they can fully enjoy and feel part of all the action. The famous "Green Monster" left field wall is a baseball landmark well-known throughout America. The tricky angles and corners around the outfield have been known to make an adventure out of what might otherwise appear to be a routine play.

From the year 1912, when it was first constructed, Fenway Park has been the scene of classic baseball confrontations. That year, Tris Speaker hit .383, shared the American League home run title, and led the team to a smashing World Series victory over the New York Giants. That was the beginning of a cherished Red Sox Fenway tradition. Through the years, the tradition has been kept alive by a parade of successful Red Sox teams. Home runs, big innings, and high-scoring games have become synonymous with the name Fenway Park.

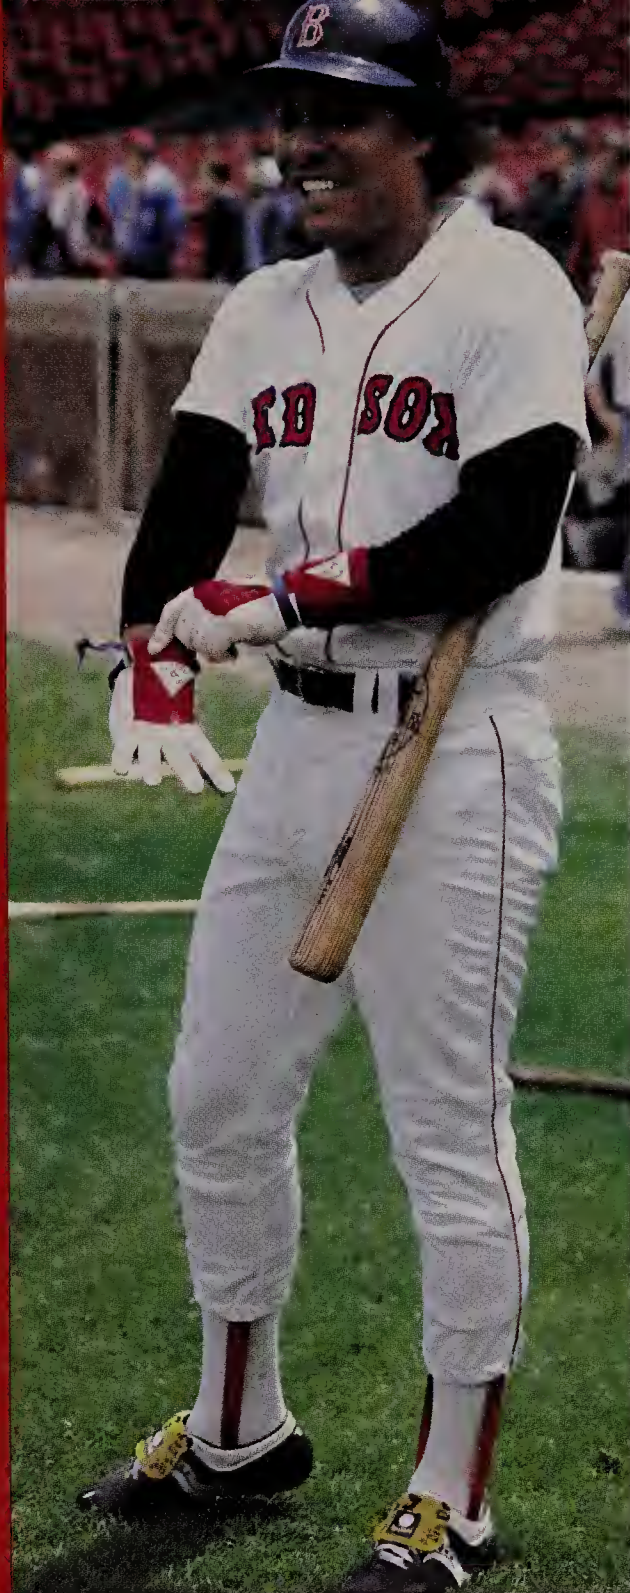

Vigorous new owner Tom Yawkey rebuilt the club in the mid-1930s with Joe Cronin, Jimmie Foxx and Lefty Grove plus young talent like Ted Williams, Bobby Doerr, Johnny Pesky, Dom DiMaggio and Tex Hughson.

The offensive powerhouse of 1946 won 104 games and finished 12 games ahead. In 1967 the "Impossible Dream" pennant came from the Triple Crown feats of Carl Yastrzemski, supported by the heroics of George Scott, Rico Petrocelli, Reggie Smith and Tony Conigliaro, and the contributions of Jerry Adair, Jose Tartabull, Gary Bell, Lee Stange and Jim Lonborg. It was a remarkable team effort with Manager Dick Williams leading the charge.

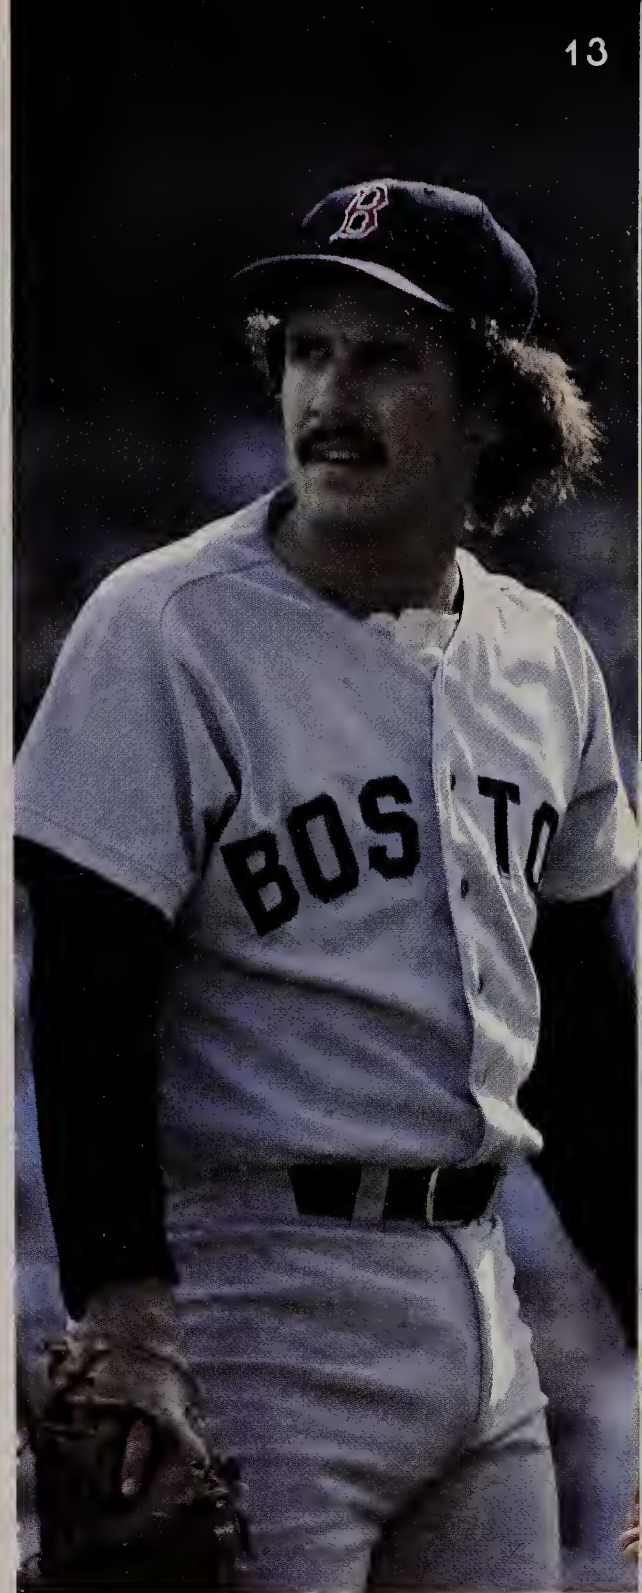

There was more of the same in 1975 when stellar rookies Fred Lynn and Jim Rice burst onto the Fenway scene. Carlton Fisk, Rick Burleson, Dwight Evans, Jim Willoughby, Dick Drago, Bill Lee, Luis Tiant and Rick Wise were among the many new Red Sox heroes who captured the pennant, upsetting Oakland in the A. L. Championship Series, and then lost the World Series in seven unforgettable games with the Cincinnati Reds.

Now there is a new cast in Red Sox uniforms, a lineup that blends up-and-coming young players with capable veterans. There is Dwight Evans, who last year won his fourth Gold Glove in right field and had his finest all-around season. He led the league in walks and total bases and tied for the home run crown. Newcomer Carney Lansford became the first right-handed batting champion in the American League since 1970 with a .336 average and one clutch hit after another. Jerry Remy came back from knee surgery to spark many rallies. Dave Stapleton played all four infield positions and continued his excellent hitting, while Rick Miller returned, after three years with the Angels, to play superbly in center field. And the bullpen foursome of Mark Clear, Bill Campbell, Tom Burgmeier and Bob Stanley was the team's foundation.

Up from the farm system came catcher Rich Gedman, voted the American League Rookie Player of the Year by The Sporting News, and pitchers Bob Ojeda, Bruce Hurst and Luis Aponte. They have joined such farm system graduates as Glenn Hoffman, Reid Nichols, John Tudor, Steve Crawford, Chuck Rainey, Gary Allenson, Julio Valdez and Chico Walker. Together they provide a sturdy nucleus for the future. For these Red Sox players, under the enthusiastic leadership of Manager Ralph Houk, the future begins in 1982.

It is an oyster-gray February day, raw and chilly, a time which means baseball to the diehard fans who measure winter in terms of the number of hours until spring training.

And to those who play it for a living.

Dwight Evans, the Boston Red Sox right fielder, has just completed a morning class of karate. He will participate in an afternoon session of aerobic exercises. Five hours a day, five days a week.

The karate stresses concentration, mental discipline and quick reaction. The aerobic exercises are for conditioning, the fine tuning of muscles that must be at their fittest for the next eight months. It is a rigorous program, one which has Evans down to a svelte and strong 203 pounds. He usually goes to spring training at 207 or 208 and works off about seven pounds before the season starts.

"I'm a little scared this year. I don't think I've ever been this strong," he says. "I know I'm in good shape and I can't wait to get going."

Off-season conditioning is a virtual must these days, something many Red Sox players have been doing with regularity since Carl Yastrzemski popularized it in the winter of 1966-67. The following season Yastrzemski won the Triple Crown, was named Most Valuable Player and led the Red Sox to the pennant.

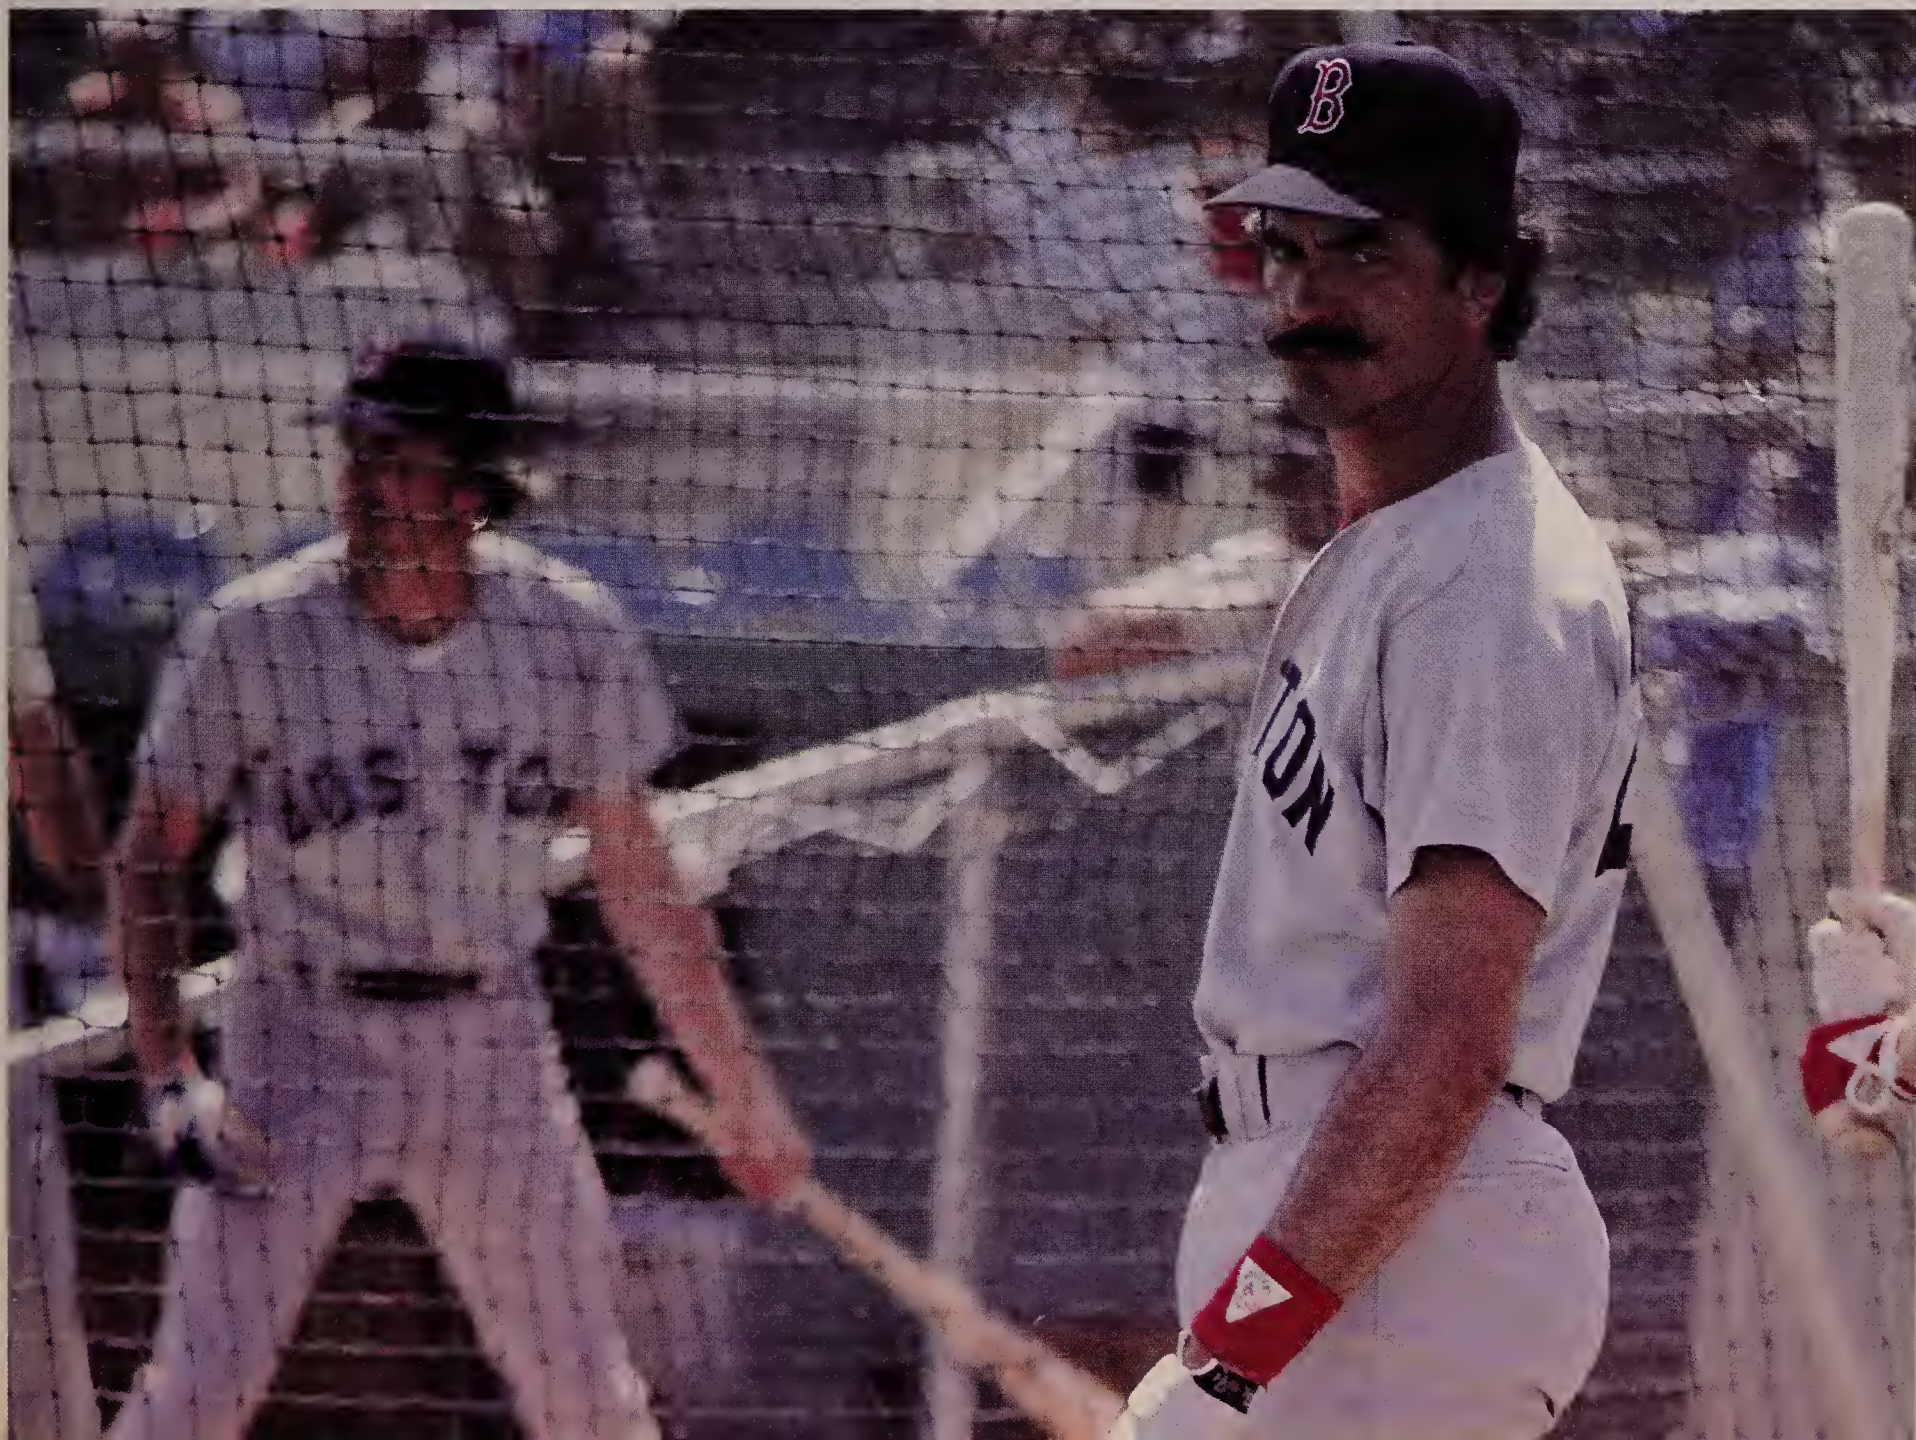

Evans has his own reasons for working so hard in the dead of winter. A knot of scar tissue in his right thigh is a constant reminder to him that keeping in shape in a physical business such as baseball is a 12-month chore. And Dwight has no intention of losing the momentum he has established over the past two seasons.

The first 7½ years of Evans' career were characterized by unsurpassed agility in the outfield and inconsistency at the plate. There was an enormous potential talent waiting to be unleashed, but a mental trigger would not click with any regularity.

"I worked my butt off in those years, but there was something missing from the mental side," Evans says. "I always had been able to do the physical things."

"SECOND CAREER" FOR DWIGHT EVANS

By Peter May
United Press International

“Ralph is a positive thinker, he has helped me. I like his attitude and rapport with the players.”

His career was plagued by injuries, such as torn cartilage and a number of painful hamstring pulls. And then came the August night in 1978 when a Mike Parrott blazer struck Evans behind the right ear. For those who had questioned Evans’ fortitude, and there were some, including teammates and his former manager, the beating gave them something to point to.

“That was something they saw,” he says. “For three days I couldn’t move my head and I had an awful dizzy feeling. I tried to come back but I would keep getting these dizzy spells, even while walking on the sidewalk. The doctor told me I had inner ear problems. But it’s something others had trouble accepting.”

He tried to come back in the heat of the pennant race. There were some embarrassing incidents in the outfield, miscues which told everyone who had ever seen him play that something was wrong. Yet there still were those who griped loudly when he took himself out of the lineup.

“I was a little bothered about that because no one gave more of himself physically or tried harder,” he says. “It just didn’t look that way. I don’t come off as a Pete Rose or a Rick Burleson. I wasn’t accepted as a hard player.”

Evans may not have been viewed as a go-get-em type, but he never had problems keeping his job. It was always hoped he could hit .275 and stay healthy so the team could reap the benefits of his defensive prowess.

Evans had won three Gold Gloves (a fourth came in 1981) and had one of the best arms in the business. But the defensive excellence almost worked to his detriment because it raised expectation that similar success should come at the plate.

Finally in the middle of 1980, Evans hit rock-bottom. He was hitting less than .200 and his frame of mind was similar, his spirits very low.

He treats everyone different because everyone is different.”

“I spent the first 7½ years in this league going up to the plate and not sure of what I was doing,” he says. “All I did was rely on my natural talent. It carried me that long but I was wondering how much longer I had.”

He went to coach Walt Hriniak, who told him to stay with one approach and see what happened. Evans had had a different batting stance to counter every hitting development. But following Hriniak’s instructions, he stayed with the new stance that emphasized contact over power.

Another thing Hriniak stressed was using batting practice to refine the swing. Evans, like many players, had thought of batting practice as a pre-game Home Run Derby.

“I never understood the importance of batting practice. I would smash one 500 feet and say, ‘Wow.’ Seventy-five or eighty percent of the players in the American League go out there and smash the ball. That’s all they think batting practice is for. Now I work on specific things to prepare myself for the game.”

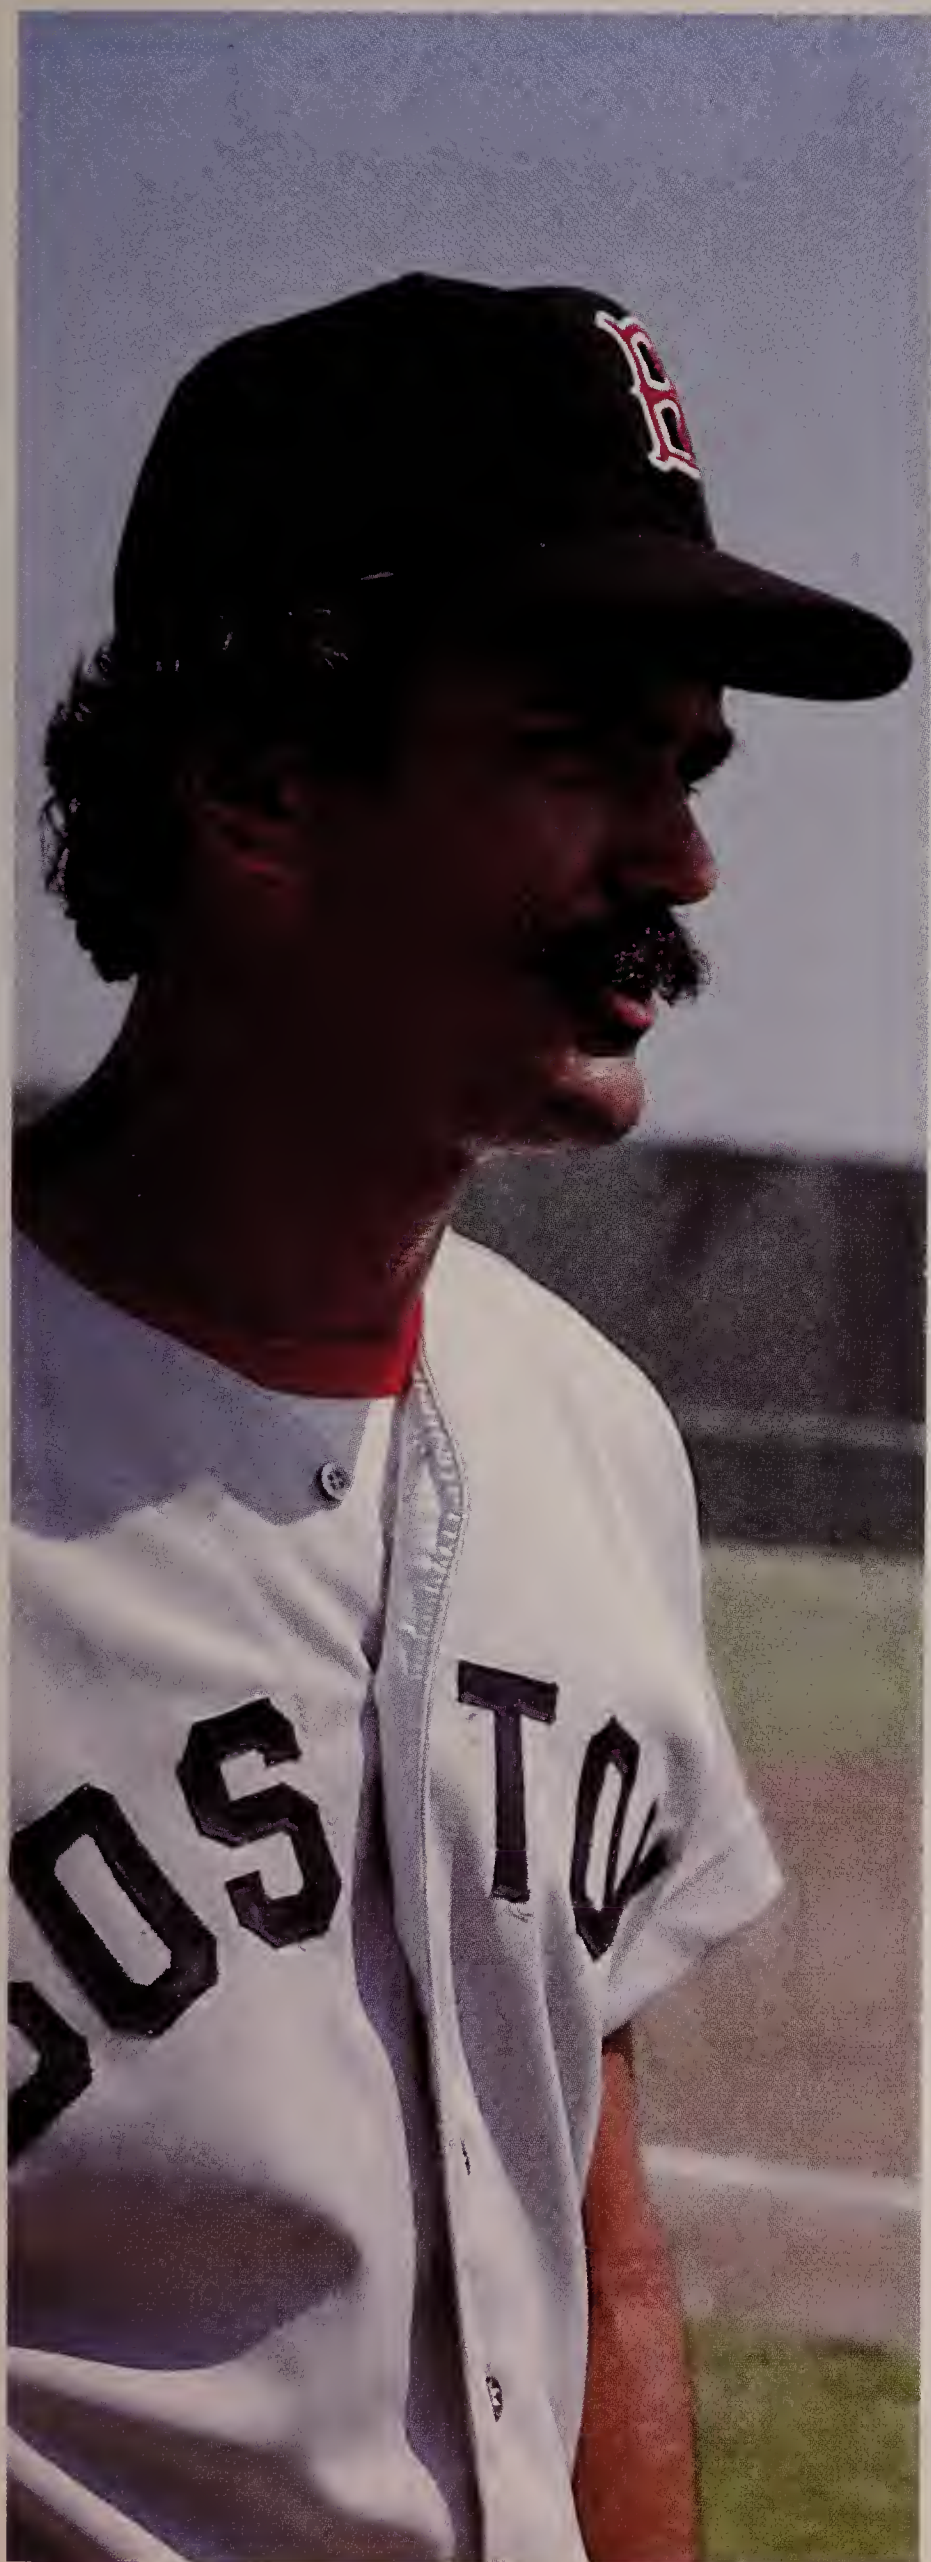

Evans finished the year batting .317 after the All Star break and approached 1981 with a new, and positive, outlook.

Evans’ fine finish in 1980 raised hopes among Red Sox loyalists that he finally had arrived. They weren’t the only ones. Broadcaster Tony Kubek predicted during spring training that Evans would be the American League’s Most Valuable Player.

“That really floored me, he was dead serious,” Evans says. “That gave me a good feeling. It’s hard to put yourself outside yourself and see how others feel about you. The players even began seeing something in me and I started to believe it myself.”

Evans made Kubek look like a prophet. He had a year worthy of an MVP, batting .296 (.341 before the strike) while tying for the league lead in homers with 22 and driving in 76 runs. The Red Sox made a run for the division crown, a run which few had expected.

Evans' year might have been historic in team annals were it not for the strike. As it was, he finished third in the MVP balloting behind Rollie Fingers and Rickey Henderson. He became only the fifth player in American League history to lead the league in walks and total bases. He hit .333 with six homers and 16 RBI in the team's last 19 games.

"Last year made me a believer. I did have a tough time after the strike, but the strike hurt a lot of things, including baseball," he says. "Now I know what I can do, what I'm capable of doing. I can be an MVP. Before, I never thought beyond Dwight Evans. But now I know I'm capable of it and that's a nice feeling."

Evans was one of seven American League players to participate in all his team's games, playing right field in all 108. He rated highly in seven offensive categories: first in homers (tied with 22), walks (85), and total bases (215); second in runs scored (84) and on-base percentage (.415); third in slugging percentage (.522), and fourth in RBI (71). Twelve of his home runs either tied the game or put the Red Sox ahead.

An important reason for Evans' success undoubtedly is manager Ralph Houk, who had been summoned out of retirement to take over the team in 1981. The new manager made the Red Sox think and play as a team and got the most out of his players.

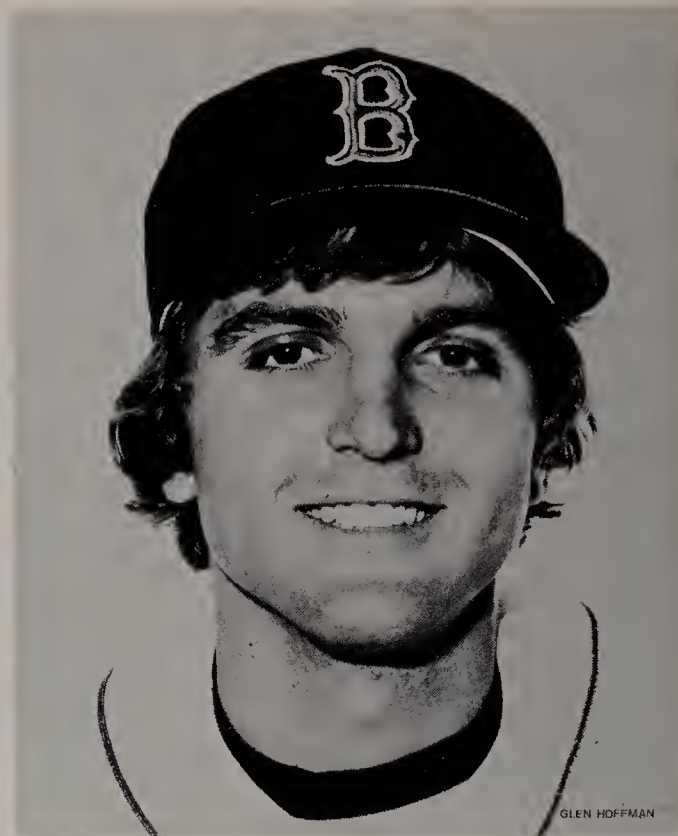

"Ralph is a positive thinker, he has helped me. I like his attitude and rapport with the players. He treats everyone different because everyone is different," Evans says.

Houk's strategy for Evans started with moving him to the top of the batting order, usually leadoff or number two. Houk, a master optimist, thought moving up Evans in the order would give his right fielder a big boost. And Evans certainly agrees.

"I came up in a lot of good situations," he says. "A lot of two-on-in-the-ninth type things. And batting at the top of the order, I was getting more chances. I always hit at the bottom of the order before and there weren't as many opportunities."

"I have the feeling that when I moved him up higher in the order it gave him some confidence he never had," Houk explains. "And I'm a strong believer in confidence. Once he got off to that great start, it gave him the confidence. From the day he reported to spring training he did everything a manager could ask."

And Houk wasn't the only one to benefit. Leadoff batter Jerry Remy hit a career-best .307 and he knew one reason for his improvement.

"I saw a lot of good pitches because they didn't want to walk me and have to face Evans the way he was swinging the bat. And when you get good pitches, you get your hits," Remy says.

Evans' splendid season may have amazed some people, but Ralph Houk was not among them. "I really don't think he surprised me that much," Houk says. "I always had respect for his immense abilities when I was with Detroit. But let's face it, he did have a great year. And when I came here, I didn't know what to expect because I didn't know a lot of the players. But the way he works and the attitude he has, he was just great all year."

Evans couldn't have picked a more opportune time to deliver. The Red Sox had lost Carlton Fisk, Butch Hobson, Fred Lynn and Rick Burleson, one-half of the starting lineup that was regarded by many just a few years earlier as the best in baseball.

The Red Sox need to score runs in Fenway Park, it's the nature of the place. The feeling that he had to step in gave Evans more incentive and confidence. Before, if he bailed them out, it was a luxury. In 1981, it was commonplace.

"I like pressure, when people depend on me. It makes me feel good, well, important. It's nice to have that type of feeling, the kind where people expect you to do that. I had never been in that situation before."

Having too many chiefs and not enough Indians had been a problem for the Red Sox in the past. In the 1970s, especially after 1975, the team had an abundance of stars.

Evans was one of the lesser-lights on the glittering team. He was regarded as a superb defensive player and a streak hitter. He was never a favorite of the demanding Boston fans. Until last year.

"I had been on a lot of great teams, but I was tired of losing. I think 1981 helped me because I had always been an average ballplayer among great athletes," he says. "I don't think the Boston fans are able to accept average athletes. Look at all the great ones they've had in all the sports: Yaz, Ted Williams, Bobby Orr, John Havlicek. They've been spoiled."

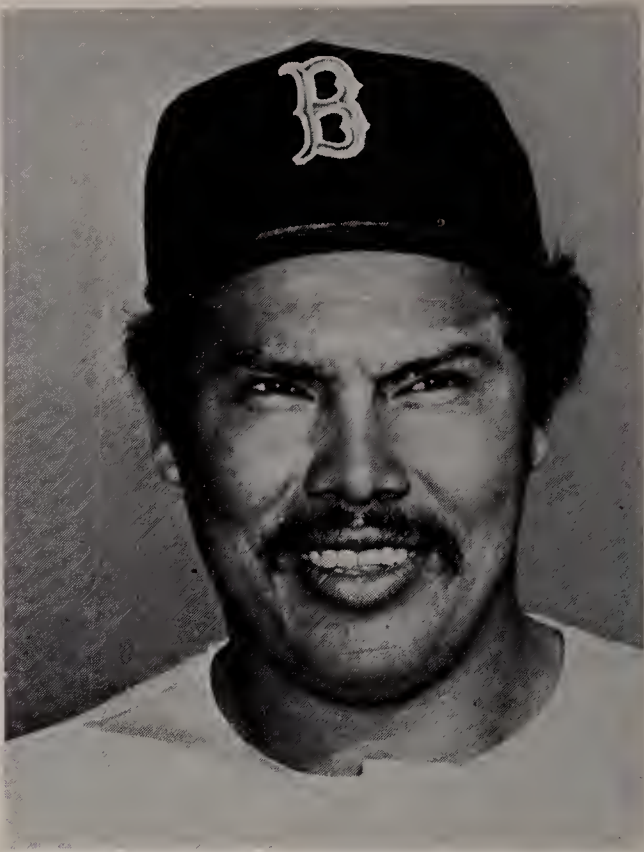

"I had a lot of problems in those years and I deserved to be booed," Evans continues. "I became hard to the fans, I wouldn't show my emotions. But last year restored my faith and loosened that hardness up. It made me feel better because I was doing better."

Evans' season prompted one national sports magazine, using a statistical formula for hitters only, to argue that he was the real MVP in 1981. The magazine noted Evans has gone from being an average player to one approaching stardom quicker than anyone else in the last four years. He has improved each year, again according to the formula.

"It's a combination of a lot of things," Evans says. "I like to call it my Second Career. Maybe there are better things ahead for me."

TRADING IN MEMORIES

By Bob Richardson
Boston Herald American

The Red Sox world championship team of 1912 was immortalized in this team photo, above, issued by Fotimo cigarettes the following year. Many of these players were still with the Sox when they won the World Series in 1915, 1916 and 1918.

Among the stars of the 1912 Red Sox, below, were shortstop Heinie Wogner, catcher Bill Corrigon, first baseman Joke Stohl and outfielders Clyde Engle and Tris Speaker, all shown here on baseball cards of that era. The Speaker card came with candy, the others with cigarettes.

Examples of the earliest baseball cards, above. Bobby Wheelock of Charlestown played only 48 games for Boston in 1887, but appeared in seven different poses in the Old Judge cigarette set. John Clarkson of Cambridge, who won 49 games for the National League Red Stockings in 1889, was one of ten baseball players featured in the set of cards honoring World Champion sports figures that were inserted with Allen & Ginter cigarettes that year. Hugh Duffy of Cronston, R.I., batted .438, the highest overage in baseball history, the year before this card appeared in Moyo cigarettes in 1895.

"Hey! Trade you Ron Guidry and Dave Winfield for Jim Rice?"

"Throw in Rick Cerone and you've got a deal."

Haywood Sullivan and George Steinbrenner hammering out a blockbuster deal at the winter meetings? No, just an everyday, street corner transaction in one of America's fastest-growing hobbies — baseball card collecting.

Last year, with three firms producing major league gum card sets for the first time since the 1930s, more than a billion baseball cards were sold. This season should be even better since all three companies began selling their 1982 sets in January, leaving more time for updates and special issues.

Not that baseball cards are anything new.

Trading cards have been part of the baseball scene for nearly a century — since 1887, in fact, which means they've been around longer than the 60-foot, 6-inch pitching distance and the four-ball walk.

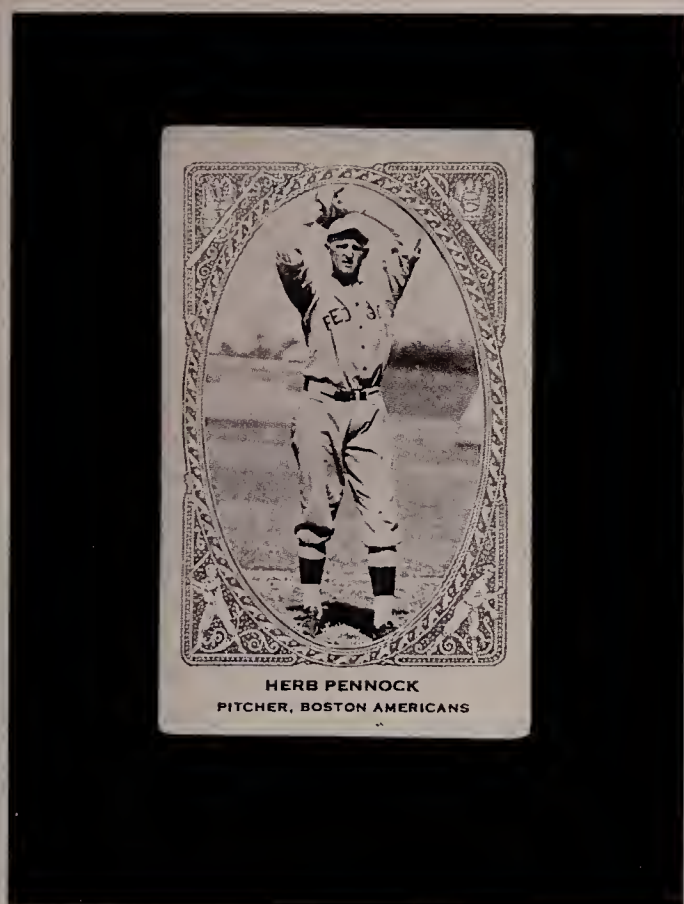

The first baseball cards were black and white photographs of ball players posed against studio backdrops, catching and batting balls suspended by string. These 1½-by-3 inch pieces of thick cardboard were inserted in packages of Old Judge cigarettes as stiffeners. With over 2,000 different photos issued over a four-year span they still constitute the largest set ever issued.

Colorful lithographs soon supplanted photographs, yielding some of the most beautiful cards ever produced. Though the uniforms were drab in comparison to today's major league garb, early 20th century artists compensated with dazzling sunsets and vistas behind the players. Unfortunately, World War I cut off the supply of dyes from Europe and baseball cards were primarily limited to black and white and two-color formats until the 1930s.

Tobacco remained the primary source of baseball cards until about 1911 when candy manufacturers discovered that they could boost sales by including cards with the caramel slabs popular with youngsters of that day. Over the ensuing years, cards have been given away in, or with, nearly everything, including dog food, bread, hot dogs, cereal, gasoline and soda pop. But the perfect match proved to be baseball cards and bubble gum.

Cards of the 1920s were drab in comparison to earlier issues, although the elaborate border on this cornel card, above, of Herb Pennock was an effort to brighten up the usual two-color format.

Some of the most attractive baseball cards, above, are the work of artists in the first fifteen years of this century. Portraits of outfielder Tris Speaker and pitcher Jae Wood flank an action photo of Speaker on an elaborate folding card inserted in Hassan cigarettes. Also pictured are cigarette cards of Red Sox catcher Bill Carrigan, pitcher Frank Arrelones and first baseman-manager Jake Stahl. There are two candy cards of pitcher Jae Wood, whose 34-5 record paced the Sox to the pennant and World Series title in 1912. The ornate card of Stahl was produced by the Ramly Cigarette Co. of Springfield and is one of the rarest cigarette issues. The larger Wood card was found in a box of Cracker Jack.

Color returned to baseball cards, left, in the 1930s as these cards attest. Rarest of the lot is the sunset-adorned photo of Sox first baseman Dale Alexander, distributed by the Geo. C. Miller Co. in 1933. The card of Boston Braves outfielder Wally Berger, issued by the U.S. Cornel Co. the same year, is nearly as rare. Also pictured are Sox manager Marty McManus (DeLong Gum, 1933), pitcher Lefty Grove (National Chicle, 1934) and catcher Rick Ferrell (Goudey Gum, 1933). All these firms were based in Greater Boston.

The first gum issue appeared as early as 1888 and a large series of portrait photos was included in Colgans, "The Gum That's Round," about 1910. But the gum card era really began in 1933, when the Goudey Gum Co. of Boston followed its popular set of Indian pictures with a Big League baseball set. That set stretched to 240 cards before it was completed following the World Series between the New York Giants and the Washington Senators that fall. Goudey added a 96-card series in 1934 and issued smaller sets in 1935, 1936, 1938 and 1941.

Goudey hardly had the market cornered in the 1930s, though, finding most of its competition in and around the Hub. The DeLong Gum Co. of Boston issued a 24-card set in 1933 that featured playing tips from Boston Transcript sports writer Austen Lake; the U.S. Caramel Co. of East Boston offered 31 cards, 26 of them ballplayers, the same year; and a 32-card set characterized by a multi-hued sunset background reminiscent of early tobacco cards was distributed by Geo. C. Miller & Co. of Boston. Springfield even got into the act with a 30-card production by the Uncle Jack Gum Co. Only the Orbit Gum Co. of Chicago challenged the New England monopoly, issuing a 60-card set in 1933 and a series of tiny self-developing photos soon after.

However, Goudey's chief competitor was the National Chicle Co. of Cambridge, which revised, reissued and expanded its 24-card Diamond Stars set of 1934 into a 108-card series by 1937. Like the DeLong cards, Diamond Stars featured the hints of Lake, then of the Boston American. National Chicle also produced a 192-card set that was die-cut for a standup effect and, like Goudey, issued hundreds of premium photos in a variety of sizes and hues.

Boston finally relinquished its role as "gum card capital" to Philadelphia when Gum, Inc. produced sets in 1939 (black and white), 1940 (sepia) and 1941 (tinted photographs).

The modern gum card era began in 1948 when Bowman Gum, Inc. of Philadelphia, an offshoot of Gum, Inc., ended the hiatus necessitated by World War II with a 48-card, black and white set. Topps Chewing Gum Co. of Brooklyn, N.Y., entered the market in 1951 and the two firms competed for the loyality of gum-chewing baseball fans through 1955 when Topps assimilated Bowman. Topps controlled the baseball card market until last year, when the Frank H. Fleer Corp. of Philadelphia and the Donruss Co. of Memphis, Tenn., entered the field. At that time, a federal judge, responding to a court challenge initiated by Fleer in 1963, denied the exclusivity of contracts Topps had signed with most players when they were still minor leaguers. Topps gum card monopoly was restored this fall when the judge's decision was reversed, but 1981 proved so successful for all three firms that both Fleer and Donruss have issued sets, without the gum, this season.

Baseball cards possess magical qualities that have helped the hobby grow from a few hundred eccentrics in 1970 to tens of thousands of "serious" collectors today. Not only do cards permit baseball fans to become fantasy owners, collecting and trading their favorite players, but they also serve as a fountain of youth for players and fans alike.

Nothing can turn back the clock like a stack of baseball cards, whether you're an octogenarian who remembers Ty Cobb and Christy Mathewson, or a youngster who considers the Red Sox championship in 1975 the Good Old Days. As long as there are baseball cards, Ted Williams remains the slender Kid who "has a great future" (Play Ball 1939), while a 21-year-old second baseman named Carl Yastrzemski is "the most exciting Red Sox rookie to come along since Ted Williams." (Topps 1961).

Nothing can turn back the clock like a stack of baseball cards, whether you're an octogenarian who remembers Ty Cobb and Christy Mathewson, or a youngster who considers the Red Sox championship in 1975 the Good Old Days. As long as there are baseball cards, Ted Williams remains the slender Kid who "has a great future" (Play Ball 1939), while a 21-year-old second baseman named Carl Yastrzemski is "the most exciting Red Sox rookie to come along since Ted Williams." (Topps 1961).

World War II didn't curtail major league baseball, but paper shortages halted the production of baseball cards during the war years. Red Sox Manager Joe Cronin is shown on his card, left, from the 1941 Play Ball set, the last pre-war issue, while shortstop Johnny Pesky is featured in the first post-war set, included in Tip Top brand in 1947. Baseball card producers haven't missed a year since, featuring color photos since 1949, when Bowman Gum sold this card of pitcher Bob Feller, star of the pennant-winning 1946 Red Sox.

Many consider the 1950s the heyday of card collecting because Topps and Bowman issued competing bubblegum sets from 1951 to 1955. Ted Williams' 1954 Bowman card, right, is one of the most prized by collectors because it was withdrawn when it was discovered he was under exclusive contract to Topps. Williams was replaced in the 1954 Bowman set by a card of teammate Jimmy Piersall, shown here on his 1958 Topps card. But the gum companies weren't alone in the field. For instance, Red Sox outfielder Dom DiMaggio is shown on a card inserted in Red Man chewing tobacco.

game itself. It is interesting to discover that baseball has come full circle in some areas, such as the profusion of mustachioed players in the 1880s and again today, as well as the revival of franchises in Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Kansas City and Baltimore, all major league cities before the turn of the century, but dormant for more than 50 years before expansion.

The development of photography and the printing art also are chronicled beautifully by baseball cards. In fact, one of the largest collections, amassed by hobby pioneer Jeff Burdick before his death in 1963, is on dis-

For those of a speculative bent the hobby has proven to be a good investment. The current trend is stockpiling cards of superstars (Hall of Famers and future greats) and variations, such as the first printing of Fleer cards last year that had New York Yankees third baseman Graig Nettles' first name misspelled Craig. Rookie cards of the stars are an especially hot item, particularly Pete Rose, whose 1963 card has more than doubled in price in the past year. However, for many collectors the thrill of acquiring the elusive card of a favorite player or the last card needed to complete a set is the ultimate high of the hobby.

In short, there is something for every baseball fan in card collecting and there are cards for every budget, ranging from current issues which sell for pennies a card to the 1910 Sweet Caporal cigarette card of Hall of Fame shortstop Honus Wagner, which last changed hands for nearly $25,000.

A card collection spanning nearly a century beautifully illustrates the history of baseball, with the changes in uniforms, equipment, franchises and tonsorial styles reflecting society's progress and whims more than the inherent constancy of the game itself.

Jim Lonborg's 1968 Topps card reflects the intensity that produced a 22-9 record with the Red Sox pennant winners the year before. Topps has printed cards in this size since 1957.

1981 American League batting champion Carney Lansford is shown on his 1982 Fleer card. For the second straight year, three companies have issued major league baseball sets.

7TH-INNING STRETCH

Okay, sports fans, it's time to take that old seventh-inning stretch and have a little fun with some trivia questions. Here are 10 to start with — you undoubtedly can come up with more by simply checking the record books.

1. In many cities, sparkling new stadiums have been built in recent years. But much of the lore of the World Series occurred in old parks which are no longer in existence. Match the present stadium with its predecessor:

- |                     |              |
| Forbes Field        | Riverfront   |
| Sportsman's Park    | Three Rivers |
| Crosley Field       | Busch        |
| Connie Mack Stadium | Veterans     |

2. Only one man has pitched a perfect game in the World Series — no hits, no walks, no base runners. Can you name him?

3. The record for most attendance at a World Series game is 92,706. Where and when was this set?

4. Baseball players have an average playing life of less than five years, and so one mark of a truly great player is longevity. Who was the player who played in his first World Series game in 1951 and his last in 1973?

5. The New York Yankees have won the World Series 22 times, more than any other team. But who wins the booby prize for losing it the most?

6. Teams in the World Series are often associated with a nickname. Match the teams below with their nicknames.

| Murderers Row       | 1946 Cardinals |
| Gas House Gang      | 1906 White Sox |
| The Hitless Wonders | 1975 Reds      |
| The Big Red Machine | 1927 Yankees   |

7. Six teams have lost the first two games but then gone on to win the Series. Can you name a team which lost the first three and then won?

8. Only one player has hit .300 or better in six different World Series. Can you name him?

9. One of today's most exciting players is called "Mr. October." Who is he and how did he get his name?

10. The home run is always a moment of excitement, but a home run in the world Series is especially important. Here is a list of the top five home run hitters in World Series history. Can you put them in order with the top hitter as number one and so on?

ANSWERS

1. Old Stadium
Forbes Field
Sportsman's Park
Crosley Field
Connie Mack Stadium
2. Dan Loresen pitched a perfect game against the Brooklyn Dodgers in the fifth game of the 1956 World Series, winning 2-0. He threw only 97 pitches.
3. The fifth game of the 1959 World Series between the L.A. Dodgers and the Chicago White Sox was held in the L.A. Coliseum. A football stadium. The coliseum is so huge there were still many empty seats.
4. Willie Mays.
5. Those very same Yankees, who have won 22 Series, have lost 10.
6. Murderers Row was the nickname for the 1927 Yankees because of their Hall-of-Fame lineup which included Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Bob Meusel, and Tony Lazzari. The Gas House Gang was the nickname of the 1946 Cardinals and was given to them because of their tough behavior and reputation. The Hitless Wonders were the 1906, and later the 1959, White Sox, both of whom reached the World Series in spite of very onemc boring averages. The Big Red Machine was the name for the 1975 Cincinnati Reds who were both powerful and relentless on the field.
7. I hope you were stumped by this one; it is a trick question. No team has ever come back from three initial losses to take the Series.
8. George Herman Ruth, better known as the Babe.
9. Reggie Jackson, who in 1977 set a World Series record by hitting five home runs in a six-game series. He also tied a record, held by Babe Ruth, by hitting three in one game.
10. Mickey Mantle (18); Babe Ruth (15); Yogi Berra (12); Duke Snider (11); Lou Gehrig (10).

Carl Yastrzemski has appeared on dozens of baseball cards, above, in his 22 years in the majors, beginning with his Topps rookie card in 1961. Others shown are Topps 1964 standup, Post Cereal 1962, Topps 1967 sticker and Topps 1971 Greatest Moments.

The variety and beauty of baseball cards are illustrated by these cards, right, of Hall of Fame outfielder Tris Speaker. The large photo is a premium available from Turkey Red cigarettes in 1911, while the smaller card came in a box of Cracker Jack in 1915.

THE 1984 OLYMPIC TEAM.

DON'T BUY A MAGNAVISON JUST BECAUSE IT PLAYS MOVIES.

Watch your favorite movie on Magnavision® and you'll hardly recognize it.

Because Magnavision gives you a sharp, astonishingly clear picture—better than any VCR can deliver. And most discs are recorded in brilliant stereo sound as well, so you can hear your movie sound track the way it was meant to be heard...a whole new dimension in video/audio entertainment systems.

But we didn't develop Magnavision just for movies.

Magnavision is a LaserVision player.

And you'll be able to do things with the LaserVision system that are impossible with other systems.

It all starts with a laser beam: the heart of Magnavision.

The laser beam picks up a picture from a special video disc (it's about the same size as a long-playing record, but it's made of tough aluminum plated acrylic).

Nothing touches the disc except a tightly focused beam of light which reads the 0.4 micrometer pit on the disc. So there's nothing to wear out, and you can expect to see the same sharp, clear picture time after time.

Variable speed slow motion, jitter-free freeze-frame on any of the standard disc's 54,000 individual frames, and a "Rapid Search" button let you find just the place you want, when you want it—in seconds.

This advanced technology also gives you room-filling stereo sound (you can play it through your own stereo system—frequency response is 40 to 20,000 HZ  $\pm$  3db).

You can enjoy movies, shows and concerts (wait till you hear Olivia Newton-John's* new video Physical disc in stereo!). And the list grows longer every day.

There are also more and more "interactive" laser discs available—that's where the fun begins.

These are discs that let you participate, using the Magnavision wireless Infrared Remote Control.

You can learn How to Watch Pro Football† (and be quizzed afterwards); or try all the games and puzzles on the Grammy nominated The First National Kidisc†.

You can go on art gallery tours and attend classical, pop or rock concerts.

Don't know how to filet a flounder? Take the Master Cooking Course† from Craig Claiborne and Pierre Franey. Just put your Magnavision into "Slow Motion" and they'll show you exactly how it's done.

You can see it all on Magnavision right now.

Just stop in at your nearest Magnavision Dealer, push the "PLAY" button, and step into the future. To find your nearest dealer, call toll-free 800-447-4700.
